COMMENTARY BY INVESTMENT BOARD

In the third quarter of 2024, capital markets in the US and Europe performed unevenly due to various macroeconomic factors. The US market remained resilient, with stock markets continuing to show positive results. Much of the growth was driven by major technology companies, particularly those operating in the field of artificial intelligence. The market was supported by strong economic indicators and expectations for a reduction in base interest rates. In Europe, capital markets also showed moderate growth, driven by improved economic conditions following a prolonged period of stagnation. The real estate and banking sectors in Europe remained challenging, which affected investor sentiment. Compared to the US, European markets were viewed as relatively undervalued, offering growth opportunities.

Overall, in both regions, markets showed positive momentum in Q3, validating the fund's strategy to maintain a high allocation in equities and long-term bonds. The fund continues to invest in alternative asset classes.

In Q4, the fund expects a significant influx of capital from new donors and is currently actively planning the strategy for deploying these funds.
